Abstract	This study aimed to develop infusion learning strategy to improve students' competence on mathematical argumentation. One problem of learning mathematics in advance education level is students' less competence in problem-solving, especially those related to the matter of argumentation. To solve this problem, it needs an appropriate learning strategy, which one of them is Infusion Learning strategy. It is a learning strategy that aims to assist students to improve their competence in mathematical argumentation. The phases of Infusion Learning strategy are based on the theory of argument by Walton (1990). Toward the issue, this study applied Research &

Development (R&D) method with Borg & Gall's development procedures which have been modified into 10 steps. For this study however, it was restricted up to the 6th step. This study used several instruments including validation sheet, test of mathematical argumentation competence, and guidelines of interview. The result of this study was in the form of a valid product of Infusion Learning strategy which implementation might improve students' competence of mathematical argumentation. Another result showed that their competence of proofing improved.
